CLASS 33—(Continued).

No claim is made to the exclusive right to use "single pot still irish whiskey" and "triple distilled irish whiskey", apart from the mark as shown.

The Name(s), Portrait(s), and/or Signature(s) shown in the mark identifies a particular living individual, whose consent(s) to register is made of record.

The mark consists of a three-part label. The top-most part of the label is an oval, that is wider than it is high, with four borders. The outermost border is the widest, and the innermost border is the narrowest. Inside the oval is a capital letter "M" with a curling line extending from behind the center of the letter, out beyond the left and right side of the letter and then back behind two arms of the letter "M". The middle portion of the label is a large trapezoid with rounded corners, and deep right-angled indentations in the two upper corners, creating the impression of a flap extending up across most of the top of the label. This middle label is only slightly wider across the top than across the bottom, and it is somewhat wider overall than it is high. At the top of the label, inside the flap but also extending below it into the body of the label, is a rectangle with rounded corners that is much wider than it is high. This rectangle has the borders around the edges, the inner two of which are interrupted on the bottom edge by another smaller rectangle with rounded corners. In the larger rectangle is the word "Midleton", with partial outlining around the letters that creates the impression that the letters are three-dimensional. Inside the letter "O" in "Midleton", at the top of that letter, is a circle. The smaller rectangle is about three-quarters as wide as the larger rectangle, but very thin, and it overlaps the bottom edge of the larger rectangle. This smaller, narrow rectangle has two thin borders that extend all the way around it, and where it extends below the larger rectangle, it also is enclosed by the larger rectangle's outermost border. Inside the smaller rectangle are the words "single pot still irish whiskey", below both rectangles, aligned with the left edge of the larger rectangle, are the words "bary crockett", and below that the word "legacy" in script lettering. To the right is a depiction of a man in a suit and tie, standing over a wooden barrel with a small round opening in it, next to which rests a stemmed glass. The man is holding a long pipette that is dripping liquid into the glass. The third part of the label is a rectangle with rounded edges that is about four-fifths as wide as the middle part of the label, and that is wider than it is high. This label is divided.
